

Three things decide whether a job is yours

Your report showed you where the work is going. This shows you what to do about it.

|                                                                         |                                                                             |                                                                           |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 01 Get found They search. You come up. | 02 Get chosen They see you. They pick you. | 03 Catch the job They call. You land it. |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|

Every company beating you locally does these three well, whether they meant to or not. None of it is clever. It just has to happen every day, which is the part that breaks.

|    |                                                            |   |
|----|------------------------------------------------------------|---|
| –  | Where the work actually goes — the whole thing on one page | 2 |
| 01 | Get found — the map, then the listing that decides it      | 3 |
| 02 | Get chosen — reviews, and when to ask                      | 5 |
| 03 | Catch the job — the calls you never hear about             | 6 |
| –  | Where to start — in the order that pays                    | 7 |

A hundred people look. Six of them hire you.

The other ninety-four do not vanish. They leak out in three specific places, and each place has a name.

Round numbers, to show the shape. What matters is where the losses sit: most of the work is gone before anybody has spoken to you.

Which is why the order matters. Paying for more searches while nobody answers the phone is paying for the same leak twice.

Third at home, invisible four miles away

Where you come up depends on where the person searching is standing. You only ever search from your own address, where you look fine.

How to read it. One company, one search, nine places a homeowner might be standing when they make it. Each circle is one of those places, and the number in it is where this company came up in the results.

3 Green: in the top three
Only at its own address. This is the one it can see itself.

14 Orange: tenth to eighteenth
On the map, but four pages down. Nobody scrolls that far.

X Red X: not there at all
Two towns it happily drives to, where it does not exist.

Twelfth is not a slightly worse month. It is no calls at all from that neighbourhood. Your report has this same map for your own business.

A screenshot of a Google Maps listing for a garage door supplier. The listing is titled "NEVER TOUCHED AGAIN" in a red banner. Below the title is a blurred image of the business. The rating is 5.0 stars (3 reviews) and the category is "Garage door supplier". The listing is under the "Overview" tab, with other tabs for "Reviews" and "About". Below the tabs are five action buttons: "Directions", "Save", "Nearby", "Send to phone", and "Share". The address is "621 Godwin Ave, Midland Park, NJ 07432". The status is "Closed" with a note "Opens 9 AM Fri". The phone number is "(551) 382-1892". The business name is "XRXW+FX Midland Park, New Jersey". A note indicates it "Identifies as veteran-owned". There is a "Suggest an edit" button. Below the listing is a section "Add missing information" with a question mark icon. Under this section is a button "Add website". At the bottom, there are four red X marks with text: "No website. Google is offering to add one.", "No photos. Not one, ever.", "Filed as a supplier. It is a repair company.", and "Closed, and only three reviews."

A homeowner decides between those two in about four seconds. Google reads the same fields to decide who to put on the map in the first place.

PAGE 4 OF 7

Reviews are won in the two hours after the job

Asked whenever you remember

Job done

three days go by

Nothing

Asked every single time

Job done

two hours

Review

What she gets. The same thread that told her the van was twenty minutes out, now asking for a review, with the link right there to tap.

A link in their hand while they are still pleased gets written. The same ask on Monday does not.

So it goes out on its own, a couple of hours after you close the job, in your name. And it asks everyone, which is the part that changes the number.

The leak you never see, because the phone just stops ringing

Somebody with a leak tonight rings three companies and hires whoever gets back first. Not the cheapest. The first.

Her phone. Her call rang out, and fourteen seconds later she is being asked what is wrong. Four messages later the job is booked and she has been told to shut the valve.

Your phone. Quarter to midnight. The name, the town, the problem and the time, already asked for. One letter to confirm it.

Behind it, an assistant picks up the calls you cannot, and says so up front. Quotes that go quiet get chased until you have a yes or a no.

In the order that pays

If you only do one of these, do the first.

1 Stop the leak

Answer every missed call and form with a text, in seconds. It works on the enquiries you already have, so you can tell within a fortnight whether any of this is worth your time.

2 Start asking for reviews

Next, because it needs months to compound. Every week you wait is a week of finished jobs you cannot get back. Then finish the listing, which feeds the same result.

3 Then turn up the volume

Website and ads last. Sending more people at a business that catches what it earns is worth doing. Sending them at one that does not is the same leak, twice.

Every fix in here is one you could do yourself, with a free Google account and enough evenings. What we sell is that it keeps happening on the weeks you are flat out, which is exactly when it stops.

Want a hand with any of it?

Reply to the text we sent. We will tell you what we would fix first and roughly what it takes. If it is not for you, no harm done, and the report and this plan are yours either way.